

Dear Friends,

Given the egregious examples of racial injustice of the past 90 days and the historical patterns of systemic inequities deeply affecting communities of color for centuries, the Delaware Center for Horticulture stands together with those raising their voices against implicit and explicit acts of intolerance, hatred, and racism throughout our city, state, and country. We remain committed to our mission-based education and greening programs, which have brought diverse communities together for more than 40 years to beautify their neighborhoods, share their stories, and experience what the power of plants has to offer all people - tranquility, peace, and respite. As the healing begins over the coming weeks, months, and years, we reaffirm our commitment to being a part of the solution as an inclusive agent of necessary change and strive to be better stewards of diversity during this important moment of national self-reflection.
